

DEVELOPMENT COORDINATION

A. Major Development Partners: Strategic Foci and Key Activities

1. The Asian Development Bank (ADB) has been the main development partner of the People's Republic of China (PRC) in its road sector, providing $5.9 billion in loans since 2000. The World Bank, the Japan International Cooperation Agency, the European Investment Bank, and Agence Française de Développement have also been important partners in the sector. Since 2000, the World Bank has provided $5.1 billion in loans to finance road investments. Through the Japan Bank for International Cooperation, the Japan International Cooperation Agency has provided ¥195.1 billion, mainly for roads. Agence Française de Développement and the European Investment Bank provided cofinancing of $88.0 million for road projects in the southwestern region of the country. The key activities of all development partners since 2000 are shown in Table 1.

B. Institutional Arrangements and Processes for Development Coordination

2. ADB coordinates with the PRC's other development partners to discuss progress and issues in the road sector. This includes regular meetings with the World Bank for coordination and information sharing. The ADB Resident Mission in the PRC and the World Bank's PRC office periodically organize informal round tables to enhance dialogue and collaboration between international development partners and donors.

3. Support from ADB and the World Bank for transport in the PRC has been closely aligned with the programs established under the government's 5-year plans. In May 2012, ADB prepared a new transport support program for its country partnership strategy, 2011–2015 for the PRC, which will align with the government's transport sector initiatives under its Twelfth Five-Year Plan, 2011–2015.

C. Achievements and Issues

4. ADB's support for transport sector in the PRC has had much in common with the support provided by the World Bank, except that ADB has focused mostly on roads and railways in the landlocked provinces while the World Bank has also financed projects in the eastern central region. World Bank lending has also been diversified across more transport subsectors.

5. In line with ADB's Sustainable Transport Initiative Operational Plan approved in 2010, ADB is diversifying its transport portfolio toward making the transport system in the PRC more sustainable.<sup>1</sup> In the road sector, ADB plans to increase its support for road asset management, rural roads, and traffic safety. ADB has provided more support for urban public transport, railways, and inland waterway transport. ADB's first urban public transport project in the PRC was approved in 2009.

6. The proposed Yunnan Pu'er Regional Integrated Road Network Project will build on ADB's past involvement in the infrastructure sector in Yunnan Province such as the Yunnan Integrated Road Network Development Project (approved in 2010).<sup>2</sup> The project will improve rural access and road safety, as well as to help alleviate barriers to increased cross-border trade between the PRC and Lao PDR, Myanmar and Viet Nam.

D. Summary and Recommendations

7. ADB transport projects provide access to markets, health, services, employment, and social services. Aligned with the government's poverty reduction efforts, the majority of ADB lending, particularly in the transport sector, targets the central and western provinces to support inclusive, pro-poor economic growth in the PRC. ADB's involvement in transport infrastructure has reduced the geographic isolation of the rural poor. Infrastructure projects stimulate sustainable economic growth, improve trade, and alleviate poverty. ADB will continue to work with the government to strengthen its fight against poverty.

8. ADB will coordinate closely with other development partners on policy dialogue and share its development experiences. The government coordinates the activities of different development partners, and has used ADB's technical assistance for research and to help shape a number of policy interventions, as well as for formulating ideas and programs for its five-year plans.
