Project Description

As stated by the ADB, the Greater Mekong Subregion (GMS) Health Security Project is composed of (i) four loans to Cambodia, the Lao PDR, Myanmar, and Viet Nam (CLMV); and (ii) a grant to the Lao PDR. The project builds on previous and ongoing interventions focusing on communicable disease control (CDC) in Cambodia, the Lao PDR, and Viet Nam; and now including Myanmar.

The impact will be GMS public health security strengthened. The outcome will be GMS health system performance with regard to health security improved. The project has three outputs.

"Output 1: Regional cooperation and communicable disease control in border areas improved.

"Output 2: National disease surveillance and outbreak response systems strengthened.

"Output 3: Laboratory services and hospital infection prevention and control improved.

According to the project description, "the overall project impact and outcome will remain the same. The additional financing proposes a new output: emergency response to the COVID-19 outbreak supported (output 4). The main activities under output 4 include

(i) the procurement and distribution of medical supplies and equipment to hospitals at all levels according to need;

(ii) rapid training for frontline health workers on infection prevention and control (IPC), lab testing, and clinical care for the coronavirus disease (COVID-19); and

(iii) some non-pharmaceutical interventions, including risk communications and contact tracing. The activities fall within the scope of outputs 2 and 3 of the ongoing project, but a new output is proposed for effectiveness and efficiency in administration and monitoring."

The project output also aims to support the emergency response to the COVID-19 outbreak.
