Project Description

According to the ADB, the technical assistance (TA) will leverage Asian Development Bank knowledge, finance, and partnerships to support Mongolia in strengthening the development of export-oriented low-carbon industries, including rare earth minerals required for renewable energy technology manufacturing. The TA will enhance Mongolia's capacity for effective low-carbon industrial strategy and planning, identify barriers and opportunities for finance mobilization, propose a package of policy reforms needed for scaling up opportunities and addressing barriers, and develop a work plan for the government to provide proof of concept and build stakeholder support for an industrial green economy transformation focused on critical minerals and other metals needed to fuel the global race to net-zero.

The TA will support the development of an enabling environment that is aimed at catalyzing mid- to long-term investments focused on long-term climate goals, based on context-specific opportunities for job creation, human capital development and economic growth in Mongolia, and identify a suite of potential financing mechanisms and approaches that could unlock the required investments at scale.

The project is will enable climate-smart mining for a new climate economy by 2050, in line with Mongolia's Vision 2050.
