Project Description

According to the Bank's website, the technical assistance (TA) will support the Bank of the Lao People's Democratic Republic (BOL) in improving the country's debt sustainability and macroeconomic stability. It will strengthen the central bank financial sector framework and related policies, as well as its regulatory, supervisory, analytical, and monitoring capacities. Since the early 2010s, economic structural challenges have undermined economic growth prospects in the Lao People's Democratic Republic (PDR) by causing long-standing current account deficits, draining foreign exchange reserves, depreciating the Laotian kip, and raising inflation. Behind these macroeconomic challenges are excessive government borrowing and repayment obligations to finance increasing external public sector debts, at least in part. These have been on the rise as the relatively underdeveloped local capital markets have forced the government to fund its needs using external sources.
