Project Description

According to the bank, the project consists of the design, construction, operation and maintenance of a greenfield multipurpose port facility located in the Gulf of Uraba, Antioquia, Colombia, under a 30-year concession contract (the "Project"). The Project will build up on existing and captive traffic (major shipping lines already call at Uraba despite the lack of modern port facilities), becoming the main outlet for Uraba's banana and fruit exports, which represent 75% of Colombian banana exports. Due to its location and logistic cost advantages, it is also expected that Puerto Antioquia will divert cargo in/out of Medellin (2nd largest city in Colombia and main international trade region in Colombia), in/out Bogota and their surrounding areas.
