Project Description

According to IFC website, the Mombasa Gas Terminal is developing a greenfield liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) terminal, in the Port of Mombasa, Kenya that will import and market LPG within the country. The terminal will have direct mooring access for large-sized LPG carriers, a pipeline for the transfer of gas to an onshore storage facility which has a capacity of 22,000 metric tons (MT) that will be mounded. The aim of the project is to address issues of LPG supply and infrastructure in the Port of Mombasa to support the LPG master plan for Kenya. The expected development impact of the project includes:

1. Positive impact on LPG end-users who will have more access as a result of larger LPG volumes, more affordable price, and increased access to a cleaner, more efficient and safer fuel.
2. Positive impact on distributors, as LPG will be more readily available, as a result of MGT's competitiveness arising from its scale, enabling distributors meet the growing demand and size of the market.
3. Supports environmental sustainability through diversification into more efficient and safer energy resources than currently available, and with potential linkages to domestic retail and distribution sector.
