Project Description

OVERVIEW

The project aims to create new markets for private investment in the agribusiness sector of Ghana. The project builds directly on the findings of the recent Country Private Sector Diagnostic (CPSD), conducted by the World Bank Group, which identifies agribusiness as one of the most promising economic sectors in Ghana. Based on an assessment of the market barriers, pre-implementation findings, and comparative advantages of IFC, the project will focus on the following three components: (i) investment promotion to identify and proactively support the entry of responsible agribusiness investors, (ii) addressing key regulatory reforms, and (iii) promotion of agri-service market opportunities.

People Affected By This Project

The objective of the Invest Ghana: Agribusiness Competitiveness Advisory Project (Invest Ghana) is to create new markets for private investment in the agribusiness sector in Ghana. The project is under the umbrella of the Invest West Africa program, a regional initiative financed by the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and implemented by IFC. The project will target new private investment in the agribusiness sector. Outcomes tracked will include the number of commitments by private companies to invest, and the number of regulatory reforms enacted.

Recognizing that combined public and private sector engagement is critical to alleviate the key market failures, the project will link IFC and World Bank efforts to unlock commercial agribusiness opportunities in Ghana. The project also represents an effort to operationalize the findings of the recent Country Private Sector Diagnostic, conducted by the World Bank Group, which identifies agribusiness as one of the most promising sectors for IFC in Ghana.
