At the time of writing, the IFC webpage does not provide a project description and states: "Project description pending."

However, previously the IFC website published the following project description, which has since been removed. Please refer to the IFC webpage for updated information about the project.

IFC, Bayer India and other BLF partners have agreed to collaborate to support smallholders in India, in the states of Uttar Pradesh and Jharkhand, to unlock their farming potential and improve their livelihood. Key focus of the India smallholder collaboration shall be on the following:

A. SUPPORT 10,000 SMALLHOLDER (INCLUDING UPTO 5,000 WOMEN FARMERS) FOR FARM PRODUCTIVITY IMPROVEMENTS:

IFC will work with BLFA partners to build capacity of their extension teams for supporting smallholders in adopting recommended package of agronomy practices and technologies for improvements in farm yields. Through this project, capacity building of 10,000 smallholders (including up to 5,000 women) will be carried out by project-trained extension workers of Bayer India in two low income states in India - Uttar Pradesh and Jharkhand. Post one year from completion of project implementation (2 years), average farm yield of smallholders supported under BLFA shall increase by 20% (compared to baseline yield levels). This yield improvement will be measured for a representative sample of smallholders supported under the BLFA in India.

This will include the following key activities:

- (i) Review and validate climate-smart agronomy practices of practices for chili and tomato farming*
- (ii) Provide adult education training of trainers and train Bayer India's project staff on IFC's Farming as Business program*
- (iii) Provide periodic oversight and feedback on training roll-out, farmer outreach, especially for women farmers, and efficacy*

B. DEVELOP 40-50 RURAL-ENTREPRENEURS (INCLUDING UPTO 20 WOMEN) TO SUPPORT BAYER INDIA AND OTHER BLFA PARTNERS IN FARMER ENGAGEMENT, INPUT SALES, AND PRODUCT AGGREGATION:

IFC will work with BLFA partners to identify and train select 40-50 entrepreneurs to play the role of distributors BLFA partners in the project areas in Uttar Pradesh and Jharkhand. These entrepreneurs will complement the BLFA partners' extension teams in farmer engagement and extension support, stocking and sale of agri-inputs for BLFA partners, and also serve, if required, as aggregators for farm produce in villages (to further sell to other off-takers in the BLFA). 40-50 agri-entrepreneurs (including up to 20 women) will be trained to support BLFA extension activities with smallholders in Uttar Pradesh and Jharkhand by the end of the project.

IFC and BLFA partners may extend this collaboration to other Indian states after experience gained in Uttar Pradesh and Jharkhand, with mutual consultation and approval.
