Project Description

According to the Bank's website, the project aims to promote the Moroccan textile and apparel (T&A) sector shift towards circularity by i) enabling investments in the T&A sector in Morocco, and ii) supporting the development of a value chain for the recycling and valorization of post-industrial textile waste, also known as pre-consumer textile waste. This is waste generated during the production process, such as cutting waste, dead stock, non-conforming products, which could be reused and recycled. This pilot project will focus on supporting the sustainability of the textile industry through the adoption of an innovative circular economic model, aiming to restore waste value and reduce waste, which in turn should support continued access to markets with sustainability and circularity standards.

The objective of the Morocco Textile Circularity project is to demonstrate the viability of a near-shore, integrated, low-carbon/low-waste textile and apparel production model. The project aims to build the capacity of industry players to ensure sustainable and reliable feedstock for circular production and provide thought leadership in the textile circularity space in Morocco.
