Project Description

According to the Bank's website, IFC and NetZero are collaborating to identify large-scale primary producers of agricultural commodities or multinational traders in these commodities or food processing and marketing companies prepared to roll-out a series of NetZero biochar plants in their operations or supply chain. The collaboration will include the identification of these companies and related structuring of the roll-out program. The collaboration will explore and promote partnerships towards the decarbonization of agricultural operations and supply chains using biochar.

Early Warning System Project Analysis

IFC funding will, amongst others, be used to assess supply chain risk management systems and screen their operations for preliminary E&S risks. Key E&S risks to be considered at a minimum include supply chain (child labour/forced labour, third party sourcing), biodiversity and habitat conversion, land acquisition and capacity of sponsor to effectively manage E&S risk and impacts.

Private Actors Description

According to the company's website, NetZero's mission is to bring biochar at scale in the tropics. Biochar is essentially solid atmospheric carbon extracted from plant residues and buried in the soil. It is a scientifically proven way to perform high-permanence carbon removal from the atmosphere while durably improving soil quality, allowing for higher yields and lower fertiliser use in agriculture.
