Project Description

This project involves Additional Financing to the Rural Competitiveness Project for Honduras (COMRURAL).

From the World Bank:

The objective of the Rural Competitiveness Project for Honduras is to contribute to increased productivity and competitiveness among organized rural small-scale producers through their participation in productive alliances. The Additional Financing will scale-up and expand activities to enhance the impact of a well-performing project that has proven effective in improving rural income and reducing the poverty gap, thus maximizing development impact and results in line with OP 10.00. To do this, it would: (i) further support existing productive alliances as well as support new productive alliances in the original project area; (ii) establish new productive alliances in six new departments; (iii) further support value chains prioritized under public policy in the project area; and (iv) finance institutional strengthening activities to improve the overall competitiveness of the agriculture sector. The AF will benefit around 5,500 additional rural households, largely indigenous, and continue promoting participation of women and use of good environmental and agricultural practices to contribute to climate adaptation and mitigation.
