Private Actors Description

From the IFC's disclosure:

DEOCSA and DEORSA are two power distribution companies in Guatemala, collectively referred to as Energuate. Energuate is the largest privately-owned power distribution company in Central America based on the network's geographic coverage and size. Operations consist of installing low and medium voltage distribution lines from nodal electrical substations on public rights of way (RoW) to rural households located within the regulatory threshold of their distribution area, provided these meet RoW access (obtained by the end-user from the local municipality) and technical safety requirements. Energuate presently serves 2.3 million mostly rural customers.

After several private owners, Energuate was acquired by Inkia Energy Group in 2016, granting them rights to operate, extend and maintain distribution services in 20 of 22 Guatemalan departments for a period of 50-years (ending in 2048).
